But there was one person who wasn't quite as excited about Valentine's Day: Ms. Rodriguez. The usually bubbly and energetic teacher had been feeling down lately, and the students couldn't figure out why.

As the day of the party arrived, the students arrived at school with their arms full of valentines and treats. They set up a table with heart-shaped cookies and cupcakes, and everyone was excited to see what surprises the day would hold.

But when Ms. Rodriguez walked in, she still looked sad. The students quickly realized that their teacher needed some cheering up, and they were determined to make her feel better. They presented Ms. Rodriguez with a giant heart-shaped card that they had all worked on together. The card was filled with messages of love and appreciation from each student, and Ms. Rodriguez's eyes started to sparkle as she read them.

Then, one of the students suggested that they all dance together to some upbeat music. They turned on some Valentine's Day tunes and
